

Social and Personal.

The time I've lost in weeping,
In watching and pursuing
The light that lies
In woman's eyes,
Has been lost in heart's undying,
Through Wisdom has sought me,
I scorned the love she brought me,
Only now books,
Were woman's look,
And folly's all they've taught me.

Her smile when Beauty granted,
I was with eyes enchanted,
Like him the spite
Whom malice by night
Of me in glen that's haunted,
Like him, too, Beauty won me,
But while her eyes were on me,
If once their ray
Was turned away,
Oh! winds could not outrun me.

And are those follies going?
And is my proud heart growing
Too cold or wise
For brilliant eyes,
Again to set it glowing?
No—vainest in endeavor,
From bonds so sweet to sever—
Poor Wisdom's chance
Against a glance,
Is now as weak as ever.

If Thou Wilt Ease Thine Heart.

By THOMAS LOVELL BEDDOES.

Other selections from Beddoes and his biographical sketch, have already been printed in this series.

This series began in The Times-Dispatch Sunday, October 11, 1903. One is published each day.

IF THOU wilt ease thine heart

Of love, and all its smart,—
Then sleep, dear, sleep!
And not a sorrow
Hang any tear on thy eyelashes,
Lie still and deep,
Sad soul, until the sea-wave washes
The rim 'o' the sun to-morrow,
In eastern sky.

But wilt thou cure thine heart
Of love, and all its smart,—
Then die, dear, die!
'Tis deeper, sweeter,
Than on a rose bank to lie dreaming
With folded eye;
And then alone, amid the humming
Of love's stars, thou'lt meet her
In eastern sky.

FLYING GUMP COMING ASK WOGGLE BUG

Most Wonderful Airship in Existence Is on Its Way to Richmond.

Definite news came to the Oz colony in Richmond yesterday that the party which is on the way from Princess Ozma's marvelous domain is to arrive in the Flying Gump. Those who have seen it describe the Gump as being the only perfect airship in existence. They say it is so safe that the smallest child is able to reach its round top, and it is so maneuverable that it is able to land in the Lincoln Park area.

The Gump, however, had not always a great reputation. When it first appeared in Oz people were afraid to venture in it. "I am entirely safe," declared the Gump. "It's impossible for me to fall, while if any one tumbled out of me they'd have the funniest time of their lives."

No one was convinced, however, except the Woggle Bug. He took his seat in the Gump. They flashed upward, while all the children of Oz shouted.

Up and up they went. Suddenly the children saw the Woggle Bug rise to his feet. "This is too tame," remarked the Woggle Bug to the Gump. "I'm going to jump out."

"Take care you don't hurt yourself jumping," said the Gump.

And to the children's horror they saw the Woggle Bug plunge into space. Instead of falling down, however, he fell up. Three seconds later he vanished behind a golden cloud.

"Such sorrowing as there was in Oz! The children wept for the wonderful Woggle Bug, while they were most severe to the Gump. But four days afterward there was wild rejoicing. The Woggle Bug suddenly appeared in the children's great national playground. He was laughing uproariously.

"The Gump's a splendid fellow!" he cried. "It was the funniest place in the world." And he roared again with laughter.

"Where have you been?" shouted the children. "I'll tell you," said the Woggle Bug. He sprang on the horns of the Gump, and with a single bound he was up to his eyes in the clouds.

"What did the Woggle Bug say?" asked the children as he finished.

For the Woggle Bug had talked in Greek.

DESCENDANT DID AS PAUL REVERE

His Great-Grandfather Took a Long Ride to See Her Dying Mother.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) BANGOR, ME., August 30.—Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, wife of a prominent Boston merchant, arrived on Sunday afternoon in Rockland from Newport, R. I., in response to a dispatch announcing that her mother, Mrs. Paul Revere, widow of a grandson of the Revolutionary hero, was dying at the Point Lookout Club, on the Isle au Haut, in outer Penobscot Bay.

Her trip had been made, by special train from Newport, a distance of three hundred miles, with haste born of devotion as great in its way as that which impelled her great-grandfather to his perilous ride to Lexington and Concord one hundred and twenty-nine years ago.

Mrs. Revere was nearly eighty years old, became so critically ill on Sunday morning that a telegram was sent to the Thayer villa at Newport. The great-granddaughter of Paul Revere arranged for a special train, and was soon on the way to Boston. From Boston another special was taken, leaving that city at 10:30 in the morning, and the train to Portland was made in the record time of two hours and thirty-five minutes.

The special continued to Bath, where a special ferry-boat was in waiting to take Mrs. Thayer across the Kennebec to Woolwich, and at the latter place another special train was ready to carry her to Rockland, where she arrived at 5:15 o'clock in the afternoon.

Thus far the journey has been made in time never before approached on that route, but then came a vexatious delay. There was no steamer in port in which to complete the trip to Isle au Haut. The next boat to arrive would not get in from Castine until 8 o'clock in the morning, and so, in a distracted state of mind, Mrs. Thayer went to a hotel to wait. At the hotel there happened to be stopping Mr. Louis Herzog, of New York, who, with his family resides at Isle au Haut during the summer. His yacht, the Vesta, was in port to be hauled out for cleaning, but when Mrs. Thayer was there, he offered her the use of the Vesta, and decided to accompany her on the last stage of her journey to the island.

At last accounts had not returned, so that it is not known whether or not Mrs. Thayer reached her mother in time.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) CHESTER, Pa., August 30.—Ford Hopkins, a farmer, living near Elwyn, unwittingly a highwayman dressed in woman's clothing. Seeing what he supposed was a woman walking along the road, Hopkins offered to carry her as far as their roads lay together. The man was attired in a black silk dress and wore a fashionable bonnet. Hopkins, during the act of his passenger, and, happening to glance down, found that a heavy-soled shoe and several inches of man's trousers were protruding beneath the skirt.

Hopkins had just sold a load of produce in Chester and had a large sum of money in his wallet. Watching his opportunity, he seized the occupant of the seat beside him by the leg and arm and tossed him out into the road. He then whipped up his horse and drove away.

The description of the woman's clothing the man wears leads the police to believe that he was one of the thieves who entered the residence of Harry Compton here several days ago and stole valuable dresses.
